Yankee Assault Follows Near Record RAF Blow On Supply Lines

British Mosquitos last night in the wake of yesterday's record daylight attack by 2,000 American heavy bombers and fighters. Important engine manufacturing plants, iron foundries and airplane plants also are located in Kassel.

The combination of last night's and today's raids demonstrates the manner in which the Allied air forces are concentrating on certain invasion prerequisites, London quarters pointed out.

The U. S. airmen obviously are striving to obliterate the Nazi air force, while the RAF heavy bombers are performing a tactical function—that of wiping out German lines of communications in France.

Strategy Reversed

This strategy represents almost a complete reversal of that utilized a year ago. At that time, these sources recalled, the American fliers hit France more often than did the British bomber command which concentrated almost exclusively on the Reich.

"More than 1,000" RAF bombers carried out the night raids, and results were believed good inasmuch as weather conditions were favorable. Only 14 planes were lost during the night's assaults, which included the mining of enemy waters.

Still other mine-sowing operations, by RAF Wellingtons and Liberators of the Mediterranean Air Force, also paid off. Budapest and Bucharest recently announced that traffic on the Danube, the Balkans' largest river, was stopped because of the danger of mines. At the time of the announcement in the Axis satellite capitals, the enemy admitted that a river ship and several smaller craft had been sunk in the vital communications and commercial-important stream.

Danube Mined

Gen. Sir Henry Maitland Wilson's headquarters revealed today that the night-flying British planes had sown the mines in the Danube, during several missions which were coordinated with other strikes against Balkan communications.

Fighter-bombers blasted railroad installations and bridges from the main transpeninsular battlefront to the Florence area. Medium bombers meantime, bombed two bridges and a factory on the east coast of Italy. "Good results" were achieved in the operations, staged during a day of nearly 1,000 sorties which saw the Mediterranean heavy bombers grounded by weather conditions.

In the Italian land fighting, Fifth Army infantry utilized mortar and machine guns to repel four Nazi attacks against the western flank of the Anzio beachhead. The Germans tried to divert attention to two raids against hard Allied positions, then smash forward in force near Carroceto. However, all these efforts came to naught.

On the main trans-Italian front, little activity was reported.

Russ Climax Near

The Red Army offensive against remnants of some 120,000 German and Romanian troops trapped in the southwestern corner of the strategic Black sea peninsula neared a climax, with siege guns blasting Sevastopol from scarcely a mile away. These artillery formations were across the bay of Sevastopol, while other Soviet tank and cavalry legions stormed northwestward toward the vital naval base after clearing the Nazis from the historic "Valley of Death" where the British Light Brigade made its gallant but costly charge 90 years ago.

The northwestern sweep netted the Russians the important port of Balaklava, gateway to Sevastopol, which is only seven miles away. In the east, other Soviet spearheads were but eight miles from the fire-seared city where the enemy was girding for a stand.

Enemy efforts to stage a "Dunkirk" removal from the Sevastopol area were thwarted by a vigilant Black sea fleet and Red Air Force.

Highlighting the Southwest Pacific war were strikes by U. S. fliers against three Rabaul airbases and another airstrip at Satawan in the Carolines.

Domei, the Japanese propaganda outlet, claimed without confirmation today that Nipponese troops have penetrated into the jungle village of Subza, five miles north-whole country has a stake in producing all the food possible." Russell also is leading a fight to appropriate fifty million dollars for continuation of federal aid for the school lunch program. This appropriation was denied by the house.

Plans are under way to persuade the senate agriculture committee to add amendments to a pending bill which would authorize both the lunch program and the FSA.

Killing of both programs was made possible because the administration had failed to get the necessary authorization legislation on which appropriations could be based. The programs were set up under executive orders.

HARD TO PLEASE

HARRISBURG, Pa.—Capital City police are seeking a shoe "customer" who entered a store through the front door—after breaking the glass and exchanged his worn-out shoes for a dozen or more new pairs. Investigation disclosed that the intruder left wearing one pair of new shoes but crawled back through the broken glass for another pair. The store manager said they probably hurt his feet. As evidence he left behind a pair of old shoes and a pair of slightly soiled new shoes.

Reuter's news agency heard the transmission.

A few hours earlier, the Berlin radio issued a claim that other Japanese units have stabbed to within 15 miles of the vital Bengalassam railroad which serves as the main supply line to Lieut.-Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell's Chinese and American forces in Northern Burma. This claim also lacked confirmation from any reliable source.

In New York, NBC heard a British radio broadcast reporting that Maj.-Gen. George S. Stratemeyer, commander of the Eastern Air Force, has moved his headquarters from New Delhi to Calcutta, moving nearer the fighting front.

billions have been transferred from Army, Navy and Maritime Commission funds for lend-lease weapons.

In addition to several amendments directed at curbing executive authority in final settlements was one by Rep. Calvin Johnson (R) Ill., to extend lend-lease aid only to nations whose armed forces are, or have been, actively engaged against the Axis.

Johnson also called for administrative action to require repayment to United States for goods that have been received by foreign governments and resold to their people. He abandoned an earlier plan to introduce a resolution on that issue, explaining that it should be corrected administratively.

Knutson, criticizing administration of the program and calling for congressional controls, said he thought recipients "have been assured Uncle Sam doesn't expect them to pay it back."

Asked if he "was opposing lend-lease extension," Knutson flared back:

"I'm not attacking lend-lease. I'm merely taking off the cover to see what makes it smell."

Dr. G. W. Heffner who viewed the body of Pearl W. Notestone at the Deffenbaugh Funeral Home after he had been killed in an automobile accident near the South Perry school, last Sunday said his ribs had been crushed above the heart. The examination by Dr. Heffner was made on request of the prosecuting attorney and the coroner of Hocking county. Mr. Notestone a retired school teacher, of that community was walking along the road in company with Lewis Stump, a neighbor when he was struck by the automobile of Earl Warren, Perry township, who was driving past another car. His companion, Mr. Stump was not hurt.

BRICKER ENDS TEN DAY DRIVE ON WEST COAST

LOS ANGELES, April 19—Gov. John W. Bricker of Ohio, Republican presidential candidate, was to board a plane today for Phoenix, Ariz., on his way back to Columbus at the end of a busy 10-day tour of the Pacific states.

The governor, in his last public appearance on the coast, rapped what he termed the War Relocation Authority laxity and inefficiency. He declared American communities should be permitted after the war to decide for themselves whether or not they will receive disloyal Japanese left in this country.

For the disloyal Japanese, Gov. Bricker advocated deportation, declaring that "no person who confesses he cannot be loyal to the United States should be permitted to find sanctuary here."

The WRA showed inefficiency and laxity in permitting the release of Japanese from relocation centers, the Ohioan declared.

Bricker paid tribute to California's Gov. Earl Warren when he spoke of him as "my close personal friend" and lauded Warren's administration.

The midwest governor spent a busy last day in Los Angeles during which he met additional members of Southern California's Republican presidential delegation, spoke at the Jonathan Breakfast club, acted as host to a score of Ohio societies and other state groups, visited Hollywood's movie studios and caught the first ball tossed at Wrigley field in the opening Pacific Coast League baseball game there between the Los Angeles Angels and Hollywood stars.

president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

National Chairman Harrison E. Spangler and Arrangements Committee Chairman Hallanan agreed that the convention this year would be put on "without any frills". It will be conducted, they said, "with the spirit of the people dedicated to winning the war."

Hallanan added: "The job of selecting the man, who in my honest opinion will be the next president of the United States, and who as such will inherit and assume the greatest responsibilities ever imposed on any president, is a sober, solemn and serious business. It is no time to put on a show."

Hallanan said the Democrats, who will stage their national convention at the Chicago stadium beginning July 19, had "worked in complete harmony" with the Republicans in connection with convention arrangements and expenses.

Pointing to the historic importance of the Republican convention, Hallanan said requests for accommodations had been received from members of the British Parliament, Tass, Russian News Agency; citizens of South America, the British broadcasting system, and newspapers in China, Sweden, England, Latin America and French Africa.

Hallanan attributed the widespread demand to a belief that "the nominee of our Chicago convention will be the next president and commander-in-chief who will direct the final drive to victory."

BETTER TRAVEL AHEAD

ST. LOUIS—Postwar aviation won't live up to the current "Buck Rogers school of forecasting," but it will present a faster, more comfortable, and cheaper method of transportation than that of today. This was the prediction of William A. M. Burden, of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce. Passenger fares can be cut as much as 30 percent below present Pullman fares, Burden declared, and at least 20,000,000 passengers a year, or 70 percent of prewar Pullman traffic will go by air.

Commander Reynolds Played Important Role In Invasion of Italy

Lieutenant Commander Walter A. Reynolds of the United States Coast Guard, a native of Ohio and former resident of Yellowwood, who helped lead the way in the Italian invasion, is now spending a leave with Ward H. Peck of Wayne township and James R. Tootle of Green township, Ross county.

The following story of the Salerno invasion, spearheaded by LCIs, manned by Coast Guards, appeared in the "USCG Patrol": "The veteran Coast Guard officer who commanded the lead vessel in that tiny and vulnerable fleet of LCIs which four times was singled out by Nazi dive bombers is Lt. (now Lt. Cmdr.) Walter A. Reynolds. He was the engineering officer of the Coast Guard flotilla.

"To begin at the beginning, Lt. Reynolds said the flotilla of LCIs left a full 18 hours before the main units of the invasion armada, because they were smaller and slower. However, by the time the famed Isle of Capri was reached, at the entrance to the Gulf of Salerno, the heavier and faster units of transports, freighters and warships of all descriptions all were together as a unit, moving in for the kill." The article continues with description of the dive bomber attacks, which were centered on the lead vessel of which Reynolds had command.

He has been 30 years at sea, but has not lost his love for Pickaway and Ross counties where he spent seven years before he enlisted in the navy in 1914. Since that time, all except about a year—and a half have been spent with the sea forces.

His seven years of submarine duty before and during the first World War were followed by enlistment in the Coast Guard with the rank of chief machinist mate in 1925. Step by step he advanced to the rank of lieutenant commander which was conferred December 1, 1943.

HEMISPHERE SCHOOL TO OFFER SCHOLARSHIPS TO ABLE STUDENTS IN EACH OF THE REPUBLICS

By HORACE DONALD CRAWFORD
Central Press Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Pan Americanism today is one of the brightest stars on the horizon of international relations.

When Panama's President Don Ricardo Adolfo de la Guardia opened the first conference of ministers and directors of education of the American republics last fall, he reminded delegates that in the midst of a warring world representatives of the American republics were discussing education and culture. These, he added, are the very highest of the labors of peace.

The Panamanian president developed this thought-evoking idea. "Peace, which is the foundation stone of progress, rests upon education, because wherever the principles that give life to democratic tolerance prevail, free examination, thoughtful analysis and decorous debate take the place of arguments expressed in force."

Establishment of the Inter-American university in Panama City was a major topic at the conference. The idea of such a university is not new. It goes as far back as 1749 when the University of San Javier was opened at Panama; but not until March 3, 1943, was definite progress made toward converting this idea into reality. On that date, the governing board of the Pan American Union adopted a resolution expressing appreciation for steps taken by the government of Panama toward founding the Inter-American university.

Co-operation of the Pan American Union was indicated. Governments that are members of the Pan American Union were to be urged to co-operate in supporting this proposed center of Pan American learning and research.

Educational leaders at Panama signed a 10-year convention, subject to ratification by governments of the various republics, for organizing the Inter-American university.

Under this convention, Panama is to provide the land for construction of buildings, and make available laboratories, libraries and other University of Panama facilities, as well as the National Museum. Other American governments will contribute toward the upkeep of the university.

The Inter-American university will offer scholarships to students in each republic, in proportion to each nation's contribution toward the university's maintenance.

Provision is made for creation of a fund for special courses of particular interest to American republics, and for co-ordination of special work in existing institutions with research to be undertaken at the Inter-American university.

Delegates adopted a statute of the Inter-American university. Article 1 stated this significant goal: "The Inter-American university is a community of culture at the service of the nations of America."

"Its work shall always rest on the fundamental principles of the spiritual, material and biological welfare of our peoples; it shall uphold the democratic postulates and those of freedom of teaching and investigation; it shall respect religious and political beliefs which do not involve anti-democratic differences of caste or race."

Historic Milestone

This educational conference represented a significant milestone in the development of Pan American co-operation and understanding. It marked the meeting of educational minds of 21 nations conscious of their mutual problems and responsibilities.

Important committees were formed to undertake such studies as "Philosophy and Technique of Education," "Promotion of Closer Cultural Relations in the Hemisphere," "Co-ordination of American Educational Systems," "Co-operation" and "Projects."

Dr. John W. Studebaker reminded fellow delegates that a century of educational development had been accomplished "with relatively little co-operation among the countries."

In the eagerness of the delegates at Panama, however, Dr. Studebaker discerned a "sense of comradeship which should hearten all of us with high hope that henceforward we shall find increasingly effective means of mutually helpful collaboration."

Six research institutes and schools are provided for in the statute of the Inter-American university. These include the Institute of Sanitary Sciences, Institute of American Anthropology and History, Institute of Comparative Legislation and International Law, Institute of Social and Economic Research, Institute of Folklore Research and Institute of Sciences. Educational fruits of such insti-

Text books in the United States are being revised to remove "inaccuracies and statements prejudicial to the cause of inter-American understanding."

This eagerness and enthusiasm so prevalent among peoples of the Americas to get better acquainted with each other, and to understand each other, have probably never been summed up more effectively than at the Panama conference by Dr. Carlos Lozano y Lozano, minister of education of Colombia:

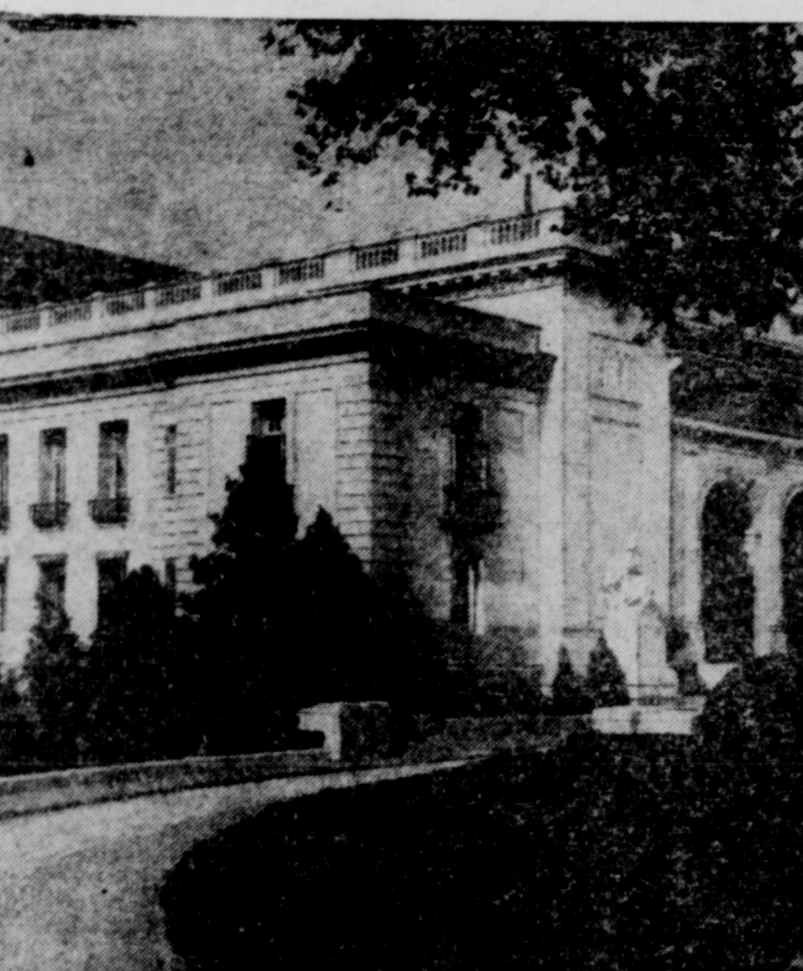

"We can affirm with pride and with serene conscience that never before in the whole of history was there so large a group of people desiring to live in harmony, to respect law, and to construct together the parabola of culture and progress. From this point of view Pan Americanism is the most extraordinary fact of the political life of man."

Pan American Day in 1944, therefore, marks significant new developments in the progress of the idea of Pan Americanism—an idea fostered by Simon Bolivar, Henry Clay, James G. Blaine, Elihu Root, Andrew Carnegie and others who have worked through the decades for the enrichment of cultural life and the growth of understanding and co-operation among peoples of the Americas.

tutes require time to ripen. Panama's president touched on basic possibilities of the Inter-American university when he told delegates: "Only the spiritual, cultural and educational union of peoples will be able to create peace among men and prevent the conflicts that periodically bleed the world and spot the fields of civilization with misery and mourning. . . .

"For the Panamanians, the Inter-American university will be a

ALLIES' GUNS SHOT DOWN 400
WASHINGTON—Though the nation was shocked at the news of the death of 400 U. S. paratroopers shot down by our own naval gunners over Sicily, unfortunately all of that tragic story was not then told.
Still untold was the fact that, after losing 23 transport planes loaded with 400 men on August 11, we lost a second wave of 21 planes with almost another 400 men three days later—also shot down by Allied naval gunners.
But perhaps even more important is the fact that eight months have now passed, and with thousands of paratroopers poised to begin the invasion of Europe, no step has been taken to provide anything but ordinary transport planes to carry paratroopers over the second front.
The inside story of what happened over Sicily and the failures since is set forth here only with the hope that it may still move the high command to side with the younger officers who have fought a losing battle to give better protection to paratroop-carrying transports. Here is the story:

MEDDLING WITH MAC
ALL this recent flurry about General MacArthur is not doing him, or the armed service, or the American public, any good. It merely diverts attention from the main job, which is the winning of a double war on the two sides of a very sick world.
By all accounts this scholarly and rather temperamental military man has been doing a fine job, for which the nation is grateful. It would be unfortunate for everybody if he allowed himself to get snarled up in any more unnecessary correspondence with congressmen or civilians, concerning anything political.

The most important facts about MacArthur are his military genius and his flair for bold strokes and eloquent utterances in connection with his fighting job. Political meddling on his behalf by civilian outsiders might be the ruin of him.
The American people have enough politics and statesmanship, in political hands, to manage that part of the job. What they want now is war victories. MacArthur has provided his share, and will continue to provide them, if meddlers will let him alone.

CHESS-PLAYING CUBAN
A country does well to commemorate its famous sons, no matter what their field. Cuba is now honoring, a little belatedly, the best-known of all Cubans, Jose Raul Capablanca, the chess-player. He died in 1942; now the Cuban Chess Federation has compiled, and the government of the island is distributing, a 300-page book on the master, with complete details of more than 100 of his games.
Capablanca was an infant prodigy who did not quite live up to his promise. At five he beat his father at chess. When still at Columbia he overwhelmed all his intercollegiate opponents. In 1921 he became world's champion at 33, and held the title for six years. Then something happened to him. He lost the championship and never could regain it. Yet he continually lived in hope, and Cuba hoped with him.

JOB FOR WILLKIE
THE Willkie case, or problem, or situation, or whatever it is, still interests the American public and attracts a great deal of comment. People's main interest in him now is what he will do next.
To that question there seems to be an obvious answer. Whatever activity Mr. Willkie may choose to engage in from now on, it should be in some branch of public service while the war lasts, at least. There are many things he can do to further the war effort, officially or unofficially. The present administration, since the war began, has chosen men for important positions with little regard to their politics, and Mr. Willkie anyway is no hide-bound party man. The American public undoubtedly would like to see him in some important war job.

WASHINGTON Report
By HELEN ESSARY
Central Press Columnist
● WASHINGTON—Not for months have I produced a suggestion that has brought the response of my prediction that Wendell Willkie is not only OUT of politics, but that he may even run as vice president on the Democratic ticket.
At Evelyn Walsh McLean's recent breakfast every public figure with whom I exchanged a pleasant "Good morning! Isn't this a wonderful day?" added:
"It certainly is. But, listen, I'm interested in that idea about the future of Willkie. Now what I think is this—"
All of the thoughts were practically identical. They agreed in this main theme—Willkie is NOT out of politics. He has put himself in a more strategic position than he has occupied since running for the White House in 1940.
He can swing his influence in any direction. And will so do.
"I'm convinced that he will come out in support of Roosevelt," a prominent Republican senator said, as we sat in the sunshiny garden at Friendship where most of Mrs. McLean's 200 guests gathered after the breakfast. "And when he does come out for Roosevelt—what am I going to say? Why, I've got the best line ready for the big moment you ever heard anybody speak. It tickles me to death just to think how appropriate it will be, so I'll not tell you now."
A southern senator said, "Of course the Republicans would be mighty glad to get rid of Wendell. He's the Old Man of the Sea to them. If they can shake him off on the Democrats they'll be pleased to death. But, honey, we sure don't want Wendell!"
That Willkie's dramatic withdrawal as a candidate was smartly timed and likely in accordance with the opinion of most of the people with whom I talked. "He's made himself seem slightly martyred," these

WHAT LED TO DISASTER
The first paratroop drop over Sicily took place before midnight of August 9-10, before the Navy arrived, and was amazingly successful. Out of about 500 planes participating, only two were lost. General Eisenhower sent his congratulations.
Prior to the opening of the Sicilian campaign, the paratroop operations had been under the command of Colonel Mike Dunn, a fighting Irishman, who had secured an agreement from the Navy that it would not fire on any planes going into Sicily for fear of mistaken identity.
Once the Navy made this agreement, it immediately brought pressure to change it, fearing enemy air raids from Sicily, against Allied shipping.
"No," said Dunn, "your boys are light-fingered. They start shooting at the drop of the hat and, once one starts, the whole bunch will join in. They can't tell who they're firing at in the dark."
The Navy then proposed that a certain air corridor be marked out through which U. S. planes could fly with safety, but Dunn argued that they might get lost, fly off course, and be shot down.
Later, however, Brig. Gen. P. L. Williams, then temporarily at loose ends, was placed in command of the Sicilian air-borne infantry operation, and finally yielded to Navy pressure. The early order was changed.

SLOW TRANSPORTS HELPLESS
So when U. S. paratroop planes came over on the night of August 11, in the Gela operation, 23 were shot down. It is not fair to say, as previously reported, that the Navy shot them all. Some undoubtedly were downed by the enemy. Also, black smoke was pouring up over Sicily as a result of fires started by our bombers and it was difficult to tell who was friend and who was foe.
However, U. S. naval gunfire was extremely accurate, and after about two shots to get the range, they made mincemeat of the slow paratroop transports.
Later, on August 14, another 21 planes, bringing paratroopers to aid the British operation at Catania, were shot down by

Small Danger Here From Tropical Ills
By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.
DOCTORS WHOSE experience has been confined to the continental United States do not know very much about tropical diseases. The war has exposed our troops in Africa, and the South Pacific to many tropical diseases and the apprehension is aroused that with Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column. their return these diseases will be introduced into this country. The danger is probably not very great that they will get much of a foothold because most of them depend for spread on insects that cannot, or at least do not, live anywhere except in tropical climates.
The situation has, however, given an impetus to the study of tropical diseases both among practicing physicians and in the curriculum in our medical schools. All medical schools now have courses in tropical medicine given by experts in that field.
The newer generation of practicing doctors will be well trained both by precept and experience if they serve in the Mediterranean, South Pacific or Indian war theatres in tropical diseases.
Malaria
Malaria, the commonest and most dangerous of all tropical diseases, has always and still is present in some parts of the United States, particularly in the delta region of the Mississippi. We are beginning to see a few sporadic cases in the Northern States in the persons of soldiers and sailors returning from the combat areas. The civilian or home practitioner must be on the alert for these because the patient may present a set of symptoms entirely unfamiliar to him. From London comes a story of a flying officer who returned from a malarious country to spend a few days in his home town. He developed a high fever with symptoms of meningitis and was treated for everything except malaria, from which in a few days he died. His doctor was a sound practitioner, but he just never thought of malaria.

Dysentery, both amebic and bacillary, is present in all the three active war zones. Both forms are quite likely to be brought to the United States, but with proper precautions for the water supply they are unlikely to spread.
Filariasis is present in all three theatres of war. It is caused by a little threadlike worm which enters the blood through the bite of certain flies. It causes unsightly deformities called elephantiasis, but very rarely, and returning soldiers who have become infected with the condition need have little fear of that or any other serious consequences.
I once knew a British colonel with a record of India service who was full of filaria, but the only way it affected him was that the little worms would crawl at night and get in the retinal vessels of his eyes and he had horrible dream illusions of dragons and snakes pursuing him. We have had filariasis in some parts of this country, notably around Charleston, but it is easily eliminated. Its spread is very dependent on optimal conditions of temperature and humidity.
Typhus Fever
Plague has always been a potential danger to all the world when trouble was brewing. It rides with the other three horsemen of the Apocalypse. But even this remote possibility is mitigated by the good results being obtained against plague with the new sulfa drugs. The returning soldier is not likely to bring back fleas or rats in his knapsack and without them no plague.
Typhus fever is not likely to be brought back here to the United States by returning soldiers because a good delousing will obliterate the danger; the louse and the flea alone spread typhus and plague.
Tropical diseases, such as sleeping sickness, oriental sore, and kala-azar, are so dependent on climate for their spread that there is little danger of their getting a foothold in the continental United States.

NORTH TO DANGER by TOM GILL
SYNOPSIS
Having helped Colin Rae, of the Hendrik's Bay Company, to escape mysterious pursuers at Winnipeg, the youthful Irina Meredith went north to meet her elderly fiancé, Rodney Selkirk, at Learmonth. Colin is investigating the seeming frail, mild mannered Jonathan Dove, head of two Indian schools, and a power among many trappers. "Once I heard him called the most dangerous man in Canada," Colin told Irina. Eluding Dove, left behind in Winnipeg, Colin and Irina flew in a small plane, owned and piloted by Blair Benedict, former schoolgirl chum of Colin. Heavy snow forced her to make an emergency landing at Trappers Lake where the veteran Alec Gunn sheltered the trio. Next morning, Alec and Blair started on foot for Learmonth. Irina and Colin soon following. The meeting between Irina and Selkirk seems most happy and romantic. Later, Colin tells Selkirk what he knows of the murderer of Van Downe, another company agent, and why he still suspects Dove though the latter has been cleared officially. He shows Rodney a 1917 photo, found behind Van Downe's desk, featuring a group of R.C.A.F. flyers, and thinks one of them is Dove. As they are talking, the latter arrives. Colin is astounded. Soon Irina enters the room and later Dove invites her, Selkirk, and Colin to visit his school next Wednesday. Calling Colin outside, Dove promises "a fight to the last ditch" if the former or his Company "fight me." Later, Irina is introduced to "Ma" Corrigan, the innkeeper, and makes a good impression.
CHAPTER ELEVEN
In a gesture of spontaneous welcome, Ma held out both hands. "My dear," she said. There was no mistaking the soft friendliness of her voice, but, as if regretting that suspicion of sentiment, she turned on Selkirk. "So this is the girl you kept in a picture on your desk? You should have brought the original up here twenty years ago."
Selkirk colored. "Twenty years ago Irina was reading fairy tales."
"And now she's listening to yours." Ma's tone was heavily ironic, but Colin thought he saw a look of relief on Selkirk's face—relief and perhaps gratitude that Ma was treating his engagement as nothing more than commonplace behavior.
And in that moment Colin seemed to see Selkirk more clearly, without the blurred acceptance of a lifelong friendship. Standing beside that vivid girl, Selkirk's white hair, his finely chiseled features and close-cropped gray mustache, became bleached and colorless. Only his dark eyes—keenly sensitive and observant—saved his face from coldness. And suddenly Colin realized that those dark eyes betrayed a man hungry for love yet afraid to seek it. That explained Selkirk's diffidence—the remoteness that kept most men at a distance but aroused Ma's maternal protectiveness. It explained, too, the half-fearful adoration that suffused Selkirk's face as he smiled at the girl beside him.
But Ma was looking at Colin. "Is Your Lordship staying with me, too?"
"If you've room—"
"I've nothing but room. This time of year we don't need traffic lights in Learmonth. Your old room's waiting for you."
"Then I'll be back tonight," Colin moved toward the door. "I promised to help Blair fix a broken pontoon."
From the hall he looked back. Irina was gazing into the fire again, absent and dreaming; then just for an instant she raised her head and their eyes met. Flickering firelight touched to meet copper the translucence of her skin and burnished the vari-colored hair, which she smiled at him very slowly. Something—either the smile or the eyes, or both—spoke to him, intimately, briefly, then she turned back to the fire. Like a man awakening from reverie Colin opened the door.
In something less than two hours, Colin covered the seven miles of trail between the inn and his cabin, to find that, with Alec's help, Blair had already dismantled the broken pontoon. By midafternoon they bolted a new one into place and filled the tanks with gas; then, tired and grimy, went up to the cabin.
"What now?" Colin asked. "Do you fly back to Learmonth?"
Blair was washing the oil from her hands as she glanced guiltily up at him.
Colin laughed. "That look tells me you're cooking up something." "I am. Want to do something to please me?"
"Anything in the world."
"Fly with me over to Nate's cabin."
Rae's smile vanished. He remembered his last meeting with Nate Tennant and the black anger in the hearts of both.
But Blair's eyes were pleading. "We can be there in ten minutes. I want you to be friends again."
"For my sake—or Nate's?"
She colored. "For both your sakes. Colin, don't be such an old rock. It's so much more comfortable to like people than to hate them. Besides, I have a special reason."
"I know. The reason is you're in love with Nate." Almost as soon as he spoke he regretted the words.
Her cheeks flamed bright, and angrily she flung back. "Leave me out of it. Isn't it enough that I don't want Nate to do anything foolish? He's still bitter against the company and against you. Colin, won't you—for me—patch up the old feud? You're both very important people in my life. Let's fly over and see him—please. He used to think you were just about the best of everything. You can afford to make the first step."
For a second he hesitated, then raised both his hands in token of surrender. "I'm putty," Colin said. "Just putty in your fingers!"
She pressed her cheek against his arm. "I love you for being putty once in a blue moon. And you'll be glad, too."
But Colin's eyes were still skeptical when they taxied out from shore. The lake, under clear skies, seemed much wider than when they landed, and they took off without difficulty, zooming up over the spruce-fringed banks and bearing north.
For five minutes Blair followed an ice-fringed stream, then, banking steeply, glided down toward a narrow arm of water where Colin saw a newly built cabin, a small dock of freshly cut saplings, and a canoe. Along the path a tall figure was hurrying toward the dock, and curiously Colin watched him through the window. A huge man, taller even than Rae, with great powerful shoulders and a body that sloped like a wedge from the deep chest down to the moccasined feet.
It was strange to be looking again at one who had meant so much to all his yesterdays. Through boyhood they had been inseparable. In school Tennant had developed into one of Canada's greatest athletes; a natural leader of men, aggressive and utterly without fear, he might have gone far in provincial politics or become one of the masters of the fur trade, but something happened—Colin never knew what. It might only have been Tennant's inability to work in harness or to take orders. . . . Later Nate had come back to Learmonth to trap and prospect for gold and, with growing success, employed a dozen trappers to run his trap lines.

And now, as Blair glided lower, old memories came crowding back to Colin. He remembered a December night three years ago, when he and Tennant had headed across the lake in the year's worst blizzard to rescue the stranded passengers of a grounded plane. It had taken two days to reach them, and almost as long to get back, and without Nate Tennant's endurance they might never have succeeded.
That was the last year the two men had been friends. The flare-up came the following spring, and for the first time since then Colin found himself looking out at Nate as Blair taxied in toward the dock. Yes, the same Nate Tennant. The strong, tanned face, full curving underlip, wide-set eyes, and heavy black brows. The plaid mackinaw shirt, open at the neck, disclosed a mat of small black curling hairs, and across his wrists and the back of his hands fine hair gleamed darkly in the sun.
From where Tennant stood, he could see only Blair, and eagerly he waved to her with both hands, while his voice boomed a jubilant welcome across the water. He pulled the wing over the dock and opened the cabin door.
"Never so glad to see anybody in my life!" His smile reflected his delight. He reached up with two great arms to Blair down. Then, catching a movement in the dock, the plane, Nate peered into the cabin, and the eyes of the two men met.
Tennant's whole body stiffened, the smile twisted to a grimace of angry surprise. Blair was forgotten.
"Hello, Nate," Colin stepped to the dock.
The blood began whipping into Tennant's face; the tendons of his neck swelled. "What in blazes are you doing here?"
Still smiling, still without raising his voice, Colin answered. "Dropped in to see you."
"Oh, you did. Well, get—"
"Nate!" Sharply Blair broke in. "I asked Colin to come here."
Savagely he whirled on her. "What gave you the idea I ever wanted to see his face again?"
Blair's own eyes began snapping. "Maybe because I'm tired of seeing you both act like a pair of strange huskies. You can't go on this way: it's childish, it's dumb. Can't you let the past rest?"
"It's not the past I'm thinking of. It's—"
"Listen, Nate." Quietly Colin interrupted. "Blair's right. We're both being dumb. We're only hurting each other."
Tennant gave a jeering laugh. "Just sprouting olive branches, aren't you? Well, pull that act somewhere else!" He tapped a warning finger on Rae's chest. "I told you to keep out of my road, and I meant it. I haven't forgotten you had the company blacklist my trappers."
"The company never did."
"Sure they did!"

Salad in Season

NOW that the salad season is coming up, it's worth remembering that salads are a very versatile item on the menu. There are those that make a hearty dinner or luncheon dish. Those that are just right for dessert. Those that load off a meal in style and still others that fill their traditional place as a side dish with piquancy and zest. Pictured and described below are four different salads, each designed to fill one of these special purposes. They might be clipped and filed in readiness for the warm days ahead.

These Four Salads, Dessert, Side Dish, Appetizer And Main Dish Respectively, Are Described Under Pictures Below

NO. 1. FRUIT DESSERT SALAD

DISSOLVE 1 PACKAGE fruit flavored gelatine in 2 cups hot water. Chill until slightly thickened. Surround bowl of gelatine with ice, and beat with rotary egg beater until light and fluffy. Add 4 tablespoons real mayonnaise and mix thoroughly, as above. Heap in the center of a large round plate, such as a chop plate, and surround with sections of oranges, slices of apple, halved white grapes and water cross. This recipe makes enough for 6 servings. Same basic idea can, of course, be varied as your own imagination suggests, using different fruits.

NO. 3. SIDE DISH SALAD

HERE'S A SPRING-FRESH green salad to accompany the luncheon entree or the main course at dinner. Or, if desired, it's good served by itself as a separate course, with salted or cheese-spread crackers. Cut a carrot in thin lengthwise slices and drop in ice water until curled. Combine carrot slices with 1/2 cup French dressing, 3 tablespoons real mayonnaise and 3 tablespoons chopped cucumber until well blended. Toss lightly with assorted salad greens—lettuce, romaine, chicory, endive, water cross, onion and carrot curls. Recipe will serve six.

NO. 2. MOUSSE APPETIZER SALAD

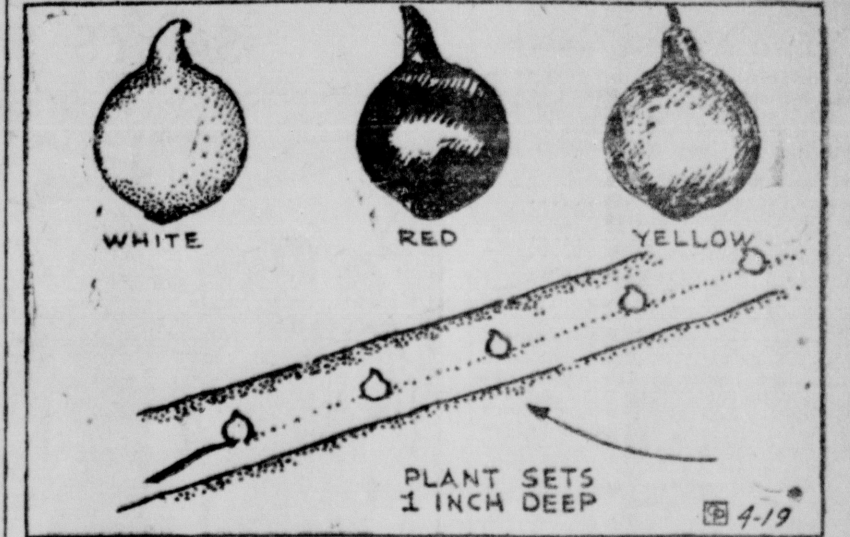

SOAK 1 TABLESPOON plain gelatine in 1/4 cup cold water, then dissolve over hot water. Add 1 1/2 cups cooked or canned salmon, flaked, 1/4 cup real mayonnaise, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/4 teaspoon pepper, and 1 tablespoon chopped onion. Pour into six individual molds or deep muffin pans rinsed in cold water, and chill in refrigerator. When set, unmold each, as illustrated above, on a slice of tomato which has been marinated in French dressing. Garnish with parsley. This is a nice salad to prepare in the morning and leave in the refrigerator till dinner time.

NO. 4. MAIN DISH SALAD

TOSS 6 CUPS DICED, cooked potatoes, 1/4 cup chopped onion, 1 1/2 teaspoons salt and 1/2 teaspoon pepper together. Combine 1/4 cup real mayonnaise with 3 tablespoons chili sauce. Add to potatoes and mix well. Press into a ring mold, or shape into a ring. Chill in refrigerator until serving time, then unmold and fill center with grilled, sliced frankfurters. Place on a large round serving plate, and surround with quartered tomatoes and salad greens. Large, bright green spinach leaves make an attractive garnish, as you can see in the picture.

VICTORY GARDEN-GRAPH

Onion Sets Save Labor in Victory Garden

By DEAN HALLIDAY
Released by Central Press Association

ONION SETS are the short cut to having onions in the small Victory garden. They are also labor savers if you want extra early onions.

Onion sets are the small dry bulbs of onions which were grown last year. They can be purchased by the pint or quart at most seed stores. One quart of onion sets will plant a 100-foot row.

White, red and yellow varieties of onions can be obtained in onion sets. The white varieties, however, are the most popular. Plant onion sets one inch deep and three inches apart in the row as illustrated in the accompanying Garden-Graph. The bulbs will start growth almost immediately and will be of edible size within a few weeks. In many gardens onions grown from sets are the first return from the garden.

It is not wise to plant too many onion sets at one time, since successive plantings can continue as late into the summer as the sets remain in good condition.

Hearing Suggested On Criticism Of Junior Athletic Commission

COLUMBUS, April 19—Someday soon there ought to be a hearing on all the charges against the much-maligned Ohio High School Athletic Association.

For the last several months the association and its sole chieftain, Commissioner H. R. Townsend have been on the "pan" so to speak. The criticisms have been many and varied. At first the association was assailed for abolishing Spring football practice. More recently it drew sharp resentment for its methods in assigning district basketball tournament winners to regional tourney sites. After the cage season ended Bowling Green Sports Writer Ivan E. "Doc" Lake came up with the idea of establishing three basketball classifications in Ohio instead of the conventional two. There have attacks of other natures, too, but these are among the more important ones.

But of all attacks against the association none have created the widespread interest and open rebellion than that of the Spring football controversy.

As a result of the football issue, and other factors, Harry Yockey, sports editor of the Canton Repository, says the time for the association to reorganize in the "best interest of Buckeye athletics."

Writing in the Repository, Yockey says, "Developments during the current school year indicate that the Ohio High School Athletic Association, guardian and enforcement agency of the state's scholastic sports, has reached an age when it should give serious thought to reorganizing in the best interest of Buckeye athletics."

"The ever-increasing criticisms aimed at the association and its board of control, particularly over abolishment of Spring football practice, must be construed as concrete evidence that the time has arrived for the institution of separate administrative programs for Class A and Class B athletics in Ohio."

Thus, Yockey calls for reform of the association from a standpoint previously untouched.

He goes on to point out that the association's membership currently numbers more than 900 Class B schools and about 250 in Class A, pointing out it is possible for the Class B schools to own almost a 4 to 1 majority over the Class A schools in any referendum vote on state athletic policies.

"In other words," writes Yockey, "the little schools can control the big schools even though the latter represents the greater number of students and provide the biggest source of revenue."

To keep the records straight Yockey points out that only schools involved in a particular sport may vote on any referendum affecting that sport. Since only 400 of the more than 1,100 schools retaining association memberships played football last fall, only 400 schools were eligible to vote on the referendum wiping out Spring grid practice.

"Those who want Spring football," Yockey continues, "can't blame the state association or district boards for its abolishment. It was the principals and superintendents who approved the proposal and its quite possible many of the coaches who want Spring football would find, if a tabulation was available, their own bosses voted against it."

Yockey objects principally to the voting edge Class B schools would hold over the Class A's in a basketball referendum. Referring to the Stark county situation he points out there are 15 Class B schools but only nine in Class A, giving the "B" group a six-vote edge to begin with in any controversial matter although the Class

REDS OUTHIT CUBS BUT LOSE BY 3-0 COUNT

CINCINNATI, April 19—Cincinnati's Reds were lacking in punch and bowed to the Cubs 3 to 0 in the season's opener here Tuesday. This despite the fact that Bucky Walters allowed only three hits. The game drew 30,154 fans.

The Cubs managed to make all three of their hits off Walters count. The Reds garnered five hits off Wyse, but got exactly nowhere.

The Cubs put together two of their hits and a walk in the fourth inning to push over two of their runs. Phil Cavaretta's triple and a long fly off the club of Nicholson gave Chicago another marker in the ninth. Nicholson also singled home the first run in the fourth inning.

MAJORS LACK APPEARANCE OF SHATTERED RUIN

Cards And Yanks On Way, 127,000 See Opener—No Player Dies Of Old Age

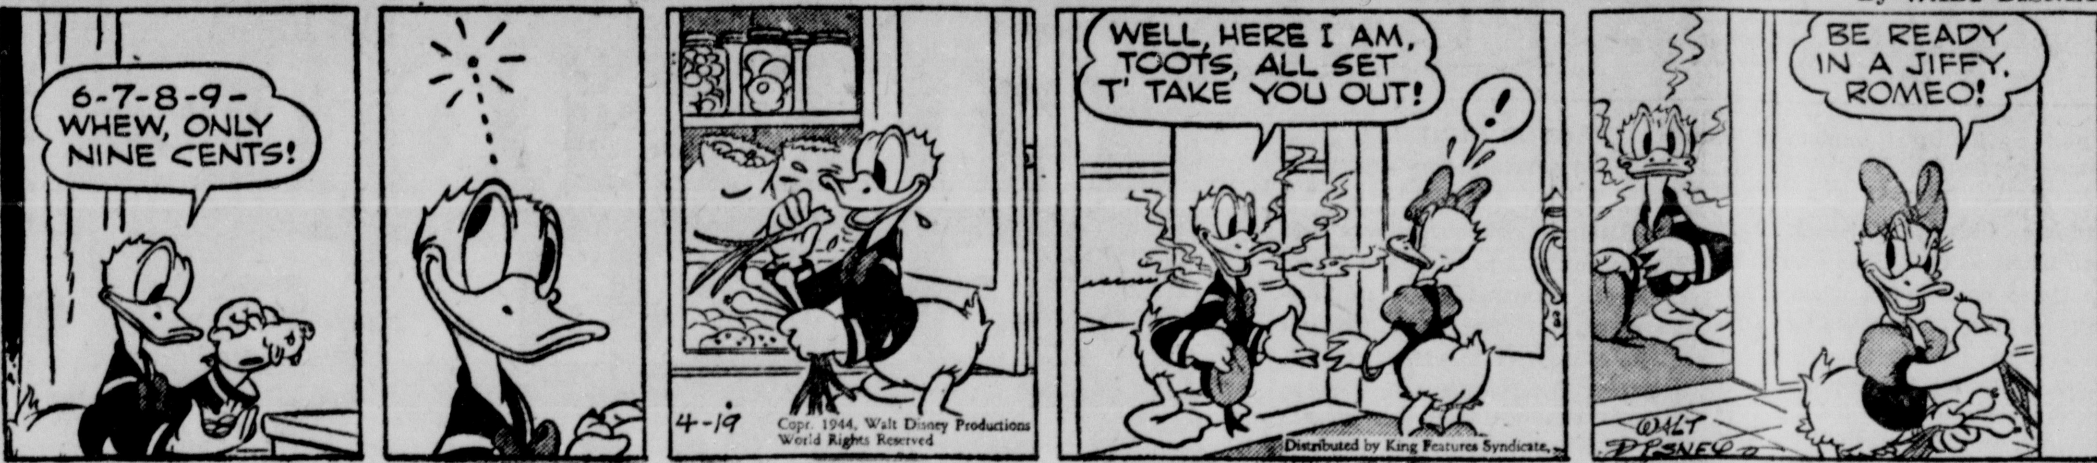

NEW YORK, April 19—Gloomy prophets who have spent the last few months predicting that 1944 major league baseball would be a shattered ruin are invited to inspect the following evidences of this season's normalcy:

(1) The New York Yankees and St. Louis Cardinals are on their way to their respective pennants; (2) Not all sports fans were at the race tracks yesterday and (3) no one is yet reported to have died on the field of old age or hardening of the arteries.

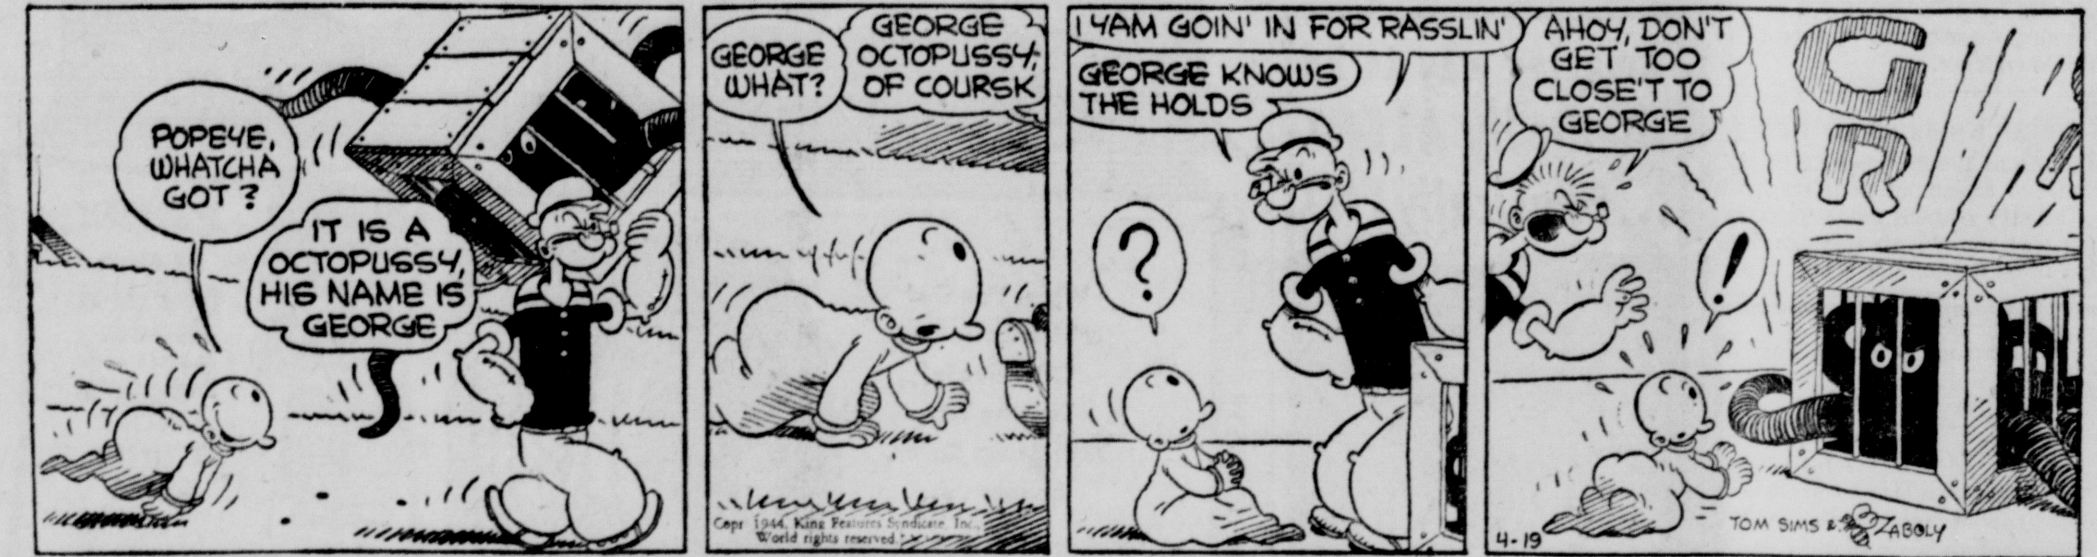

Yesterday's opening of the '44 campaign, as a matter of fact, was astoundingly normal. All but one of the games—Cleveland-Chicago—was held, whereas four openers were washed out last season. A fairly large attendance aggregating about 127

TO AIR PENICILLIN

Cavalcade of America will broadcast a stirring story of the discovery of this war's miraculous life-saving agent, penicillin, next Monday. Cavalcade's play, entitled "The Story of Penicillin," will headline two movie stars, Thomas Mitchell as narrator and George Coulouris as Dr. Howard Florey, English scientist, who helped tremendously in the development of penicillin. Cavalcade's play brings listeners the story of victory in the war of scientists against the forces of disease and death in the discovery of penicillin. It was learned after Dunkirk that even sulfa failed in some cases to save the lives of wounded where blood poisoning set in. Penicillin did the trick. It saved thousands of lives where the wounds might have been fatal had it not been for the wonder medicine.

FOR SHAPELY LEGS

Exercises designed to fill out thin legs and take weight off plump ones will be described by Julia Sanderson, in her broadcast Thursday. She will also outline three essentials of good grooming, and will help women choose hats to suit their faces. Her songs are "Walking on Air" and "The Flower Song," and with the Serenaders, "Get the Moon Out of Your Eyes." The Serenaders harmonize "Plant a Little Victory Garden in Your Own Back Yard" and "A Lovely Way to Spend an Evening." Johnny Gart and Jack Shikret, the organ-piano team, play "Mardi Gras," from Ferde Grofe's "Mississippi Suite."

FOUR STAR GUESTS

Claudette Colbert, Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten and Shirley Temple will provide a brain buster for Dunninger, the master mentalist, when he broadcasts April 26. Each of the stars will send a signed statement, in a sealed envelope, cross-country to Ruth Bryan Rohde, daughter of the late William Jennings Bryan. Miss Rohde, who will join Vaughn Monroe, orchestra leader, and Fred Archibald, publisher of the Albany Times-Union, on the judges' bench for the program, will keep the statements sealed in their envelopes, until after Dunninger has attempted to read them by thought transference.

PLAN ALONG WITH HIM

FIGURING OUT how to beat a declarer often requires your making the same plan for his play that he does himself, and figuring out just what is the main obstacle you would fear if you were in his place. After doing that, it is up to you to toss that very obstacle in his path. Sometimes no other method of calculation will give you the winning defensive formula.

At the other table where this method was tried, West refused to over-ruff the spade 2 on the third club trick, realizing South wanted him to, and discarded a heart instead. That made it impossible for South to reach dummy after the opposing trumps were out, so he lost three diamond tricks and was set two.

Not carrying coals to New Castle—more like New Castle totin' coal—was one of Fibber McGee's "get well" messages during his convalescence from pneu-

Note to the lady who sat next to that popular sailor at last week's "Abie's Irish Rose": the reason all the actors in the show nodded to the seaman continuously during the broadcast was that he used to be "teacher". Ex-producer Rip Van Ronk spent part of his six-hour pass that day in New York viewing "Abie".

$450,000 Offered for Water Plant

OHIO FIRM TO WEIGH PROPOSAL AT EARLY DATE

Bonding House To Advance Cash For Deal On 30 Year Basis

CITY NOT OBLIGATED

Engineers Provide Data On Which Valuation Of Property Is Set

Circleville has offered $450,000 for the local plant of the Ohio Water Service Co., and a "yes" or "no" answer is expected shortly after a meeting of company directors scheduled for May 8.

If the offer is accepted the bonding house by Stifel, Nicolaus & Co. will advance money to Circleville to buy the property, accepting mortgage revenue bonds for the total and providing for retirement within 30 years. The mortgage bonds will apply to no city property other than the water works and will have no effect on tax rates. City representatives pointed out that the city has everything to gain by the deal and nothing to lose.

The bonds would be paid off by revenue from the water works. Engineers declared that the city could not only pay off the bonds in 30 years, but could accumulate a surplus of more than $125,000.

Long Discussion

City purchase of the water works has been under discussion for many years without result. This present move, however, is expected to obtain results as city officials stressed the fact that the offer is fair and one that can not be ignored by the Ohio company. The city of Circleville now pays approximately $7,000 a year for water. This payment would continue under city ownership and the sum is figured in annual net revenue intended for use in bond retirement.

City officials called attention to the fact that 85 percent of the nation's water works are municipally owned and that all have paid out with one or two exceptions. They are confident that the local plant could be operated at a profit that would eventually bring about a reduction in local rentals.

Engineers Survey

Engineers employed by the city made a survey of the local water property and reported it in excellent condition. The valuation on which the offer was made was set by them. Attention was called to the fact that more than 60 percent of the valuation is underground. As regards the water mains, the engineers said they should be good for at least another 100 years as the minimum life of cast iron mains is set at 100 years and is established at a low figure for the purpose of writing off depreciation. In making the survey engineers inspected sections of the mains in various parts of the city and found that the original paint still is on them.

City officials in announcing the offer stressed the fact that the municipality will be under no obligation whatever in connection with the purchase. The bonding house will advance the money on the water works plant alone and if the city should make a failure of the project it would lose only the water works on which the money was loaned.

Engineers have assured city officials that the plant will operate at a profit sufficient to retire the bonds in the stipulated time.

Decision to make the offer was reached following all-day conferences Tuesday between representatives of the Ohio company, engineers employed by the city, representatives of the bonding house and city officials.

At council meeting Wednesday night a resolution will be passed providing a formal offer for the water plant.

naval gunners—probably a combination of U. S. and British ships.

WALLACE TO CHINA

One significant sidelight on Vice President Wallace's forthcoming trip to China is that the President personally planned to announce it. His announcement was planned as an indirect Presidential blessing to the Vice President, and the politicians were expected to draw their own conclusions.

The fact that the White House did not make the announcement was a pure fluke, due in part to a newspaper leak.

The leak got to a British newspaper, the London Daily Mail, which tried to file a story to London. However, the story was stopped by U. S. censors, because it is never permissible to publish the movement of a U. S. Cabinet officer, the Vice President or the President.

After the London Daily Mail failed, R. T. Bowman of the Southern newspapers in Canada attempted to file the story to Canada. Once again, the censor intervened. Only then did the story leak on to U. S. newspapermen in the State Department press room who immediately called the Vice President's office. There, his secretary got worried by the many phone calls and urged Wallace to make an announcement. Wallace finally yielded, much to the disappointment of his political friends, who had helped plan for the White House announcement.

Actually, Wallace is not going to Chungking to try to bring a reconciliation between Chinese factions.

"I don't speak Chinese and I won't be able to do anything like that," remarked the Vice President to friends. Then, in reply to a question as to what he was going for, he looked down at his hands, callused from work in his Victory garden, and said:

"I'm going to try to introduce a new agricultural implement to China—a push-hoe."

NOTE — Generalissimo and Madame Chiang Kai-shek have been irked at the Allies ever since the Cairo conference, when Churchill refused Roosevelt's suggestion to return Hongkong to China. Recently the Chinese have become even more irked by failures and defeats in Burma, Wallace, No. 2 man in the Roosevelt Administration, will endeavor to heal this by a courtesy call emphasizing American interest in China's welfare.

VITAL RAILROAD CENTER TARGET OF BIG ARMADA

British Mosquitos last night in the wake of yesterday's record daylight attack by 2,000 American heavy bombers and fighters. Important engine manufacturing plants, iron foundries and airplane plants also are located in Kassel.

The combination of last night's and today's raids demonstrates the manner in which the Allied air forces are concentrating on certain invasion prerequisites, London quarters pointed out.

The U. S. airmen obviously are striving to obliterate the Nazi air force, while the RAF heavy bombers are performing a tactical function—that of wiping out German lines of communications in France.

Strategy Reversed

This strategy represents almost a complete reversal of that utilized a year ago. At that time, these sources recalled, the American fliers hit France more often than did the British bomber command which concentrated almost exclusively on the Reich.

"More than 1,000" RAF bombers carried out the night raids, and results were believed good inasmuch as weather conditions were favorable. Only 14 planes were lost during the night's assaults, which included the mining of enemy waters.

Still other mine-sowing operations, by RAF Wellingtons and Liberators of the Mediterranean Air Force, also paid off. Budapest and Bucharest recently announced that traffic on the Danube, the Balkans' largest river, was stopped because of the danger of mines. At the time of the announcement in the Axis satellite capitals, the enemy admitted that a river ship and several smaller craft had been sunk in the vital communications and commercial-important stream.

Danube Mined Gen. Sir Henry Maitland Wilson's headquarters revealed today that the night-flying British planes had sown the mines in the Danube, during several missions which were coordinated with other strikes against Balkan communications.

Fighter-bombers blasted railroad installations and bridges from the main transpeninsular battlefield to the Florence area. Medium bombers, meantime, bombed two bridges and a factory on the east coast of Italy. "Good results" were achieved in the operations, staged during a day of nearly 1,000 sorties which saw the Mediterranean heavy bombers grounded by weather conditions.

In the Italian land fighting, Fifth Army infantry utilized mortar and machine guns to repel four Nazi attacks against the western flank of the Anzio beachhead. The Germans tried to divert attention to two raids against big Allied positions, then smash forward in force near Carroceto. However, all these efforts came to naught.

On the main trans-Italian front, little activity was reported.

Russ Climax Near

The Red Army offensive against remnants of some 120,000 German and Romanian troops trapped in the southwestern corner of the strategic Black sea peninsula neared a climax, with siege guns blasting Sevastopol from scarcely a mile away. These artillery formations were across the bay of Sevastopol, while other Soviet tank and cavalry legions stormed northwestward toward the vital naval base after clearing the Nazis from the historic "Valley of Death" where the British Light Brigade made its gallant but costly charge 96 years ago.

The northwestward sweep netted the Russians the important port of Balaklava, gateway to Sevastopol, which is only seven miles away. In the east, other Soviet spearheads were but eight miles from the fire-seared city where the enemy was girding for a stand.

Enemy efforts to stage a "Dunkirk" removal from the Sevastopol area were thwarted by a vigilant Black sea fleet and Red Air Force.

Highlighting the Southwest Pacific war were strikes by U. S. fliers against three Rabaul airdromes and another airstrip at Satawan in the Carolines.

Domei, the Japanese propaganda outlet, claimed without confirmation today that Nipponese troops have penetrated into the jungle village of Subza, five miles north-

Plans are under way to persuade the senate agriculture committee to add amendments to a pending bill which would authorize both the lunch program and the FSA.

Killing of both programs was made possible because the administration had failed to get the necessary authorization legislation on which appropriations could be based. The programs were set up under executive orders.

HARD TO PLEASE

billions have been transferred from Army, Navy and Maritime Commission funds for lend-lease weapons.

In addition to several amendments directed at curbing executive authority in final settlements was one by Rep. Calvin Johnson (R) Ill., to extend lend-lease aid only to nations whose armed forces are, or have been, actively engaged against the Axis.

Johnson also called for administrative action to require repayment to United States for goods that have been received by foreign governments and resold to their people. He abandoned an earlier plan to introduce a resolution on that issue, explaining that it should be corrected administratively.

Knutson, criticizing administration of the program and calling for congressional controls, said he thought recipients "have been assured Uncle Sam doesn't expect them to pay it back."

Asked if he "was opposing lend-lease extension," Knutson flared back: "I'm not attacking lend-lease. I'm merely taking off the cover to see what makes it smell."

DR. G. W. HEFFNER VIEWS BODY OF CRASH VICTIM

Dr. G. W. Heffner who viewed the body of Pearl W. Notestone at the Deffenbaugh Funeral Home after he had been killed in an automobile accident near the South Perry school, last Sunday said his ribs had been crushed above the heart. The examination by Dr. Heffner was made on request of the prosecuting attorney and the coroner of Hocking county. Mr. Notestone a retired school teacher, of that community was walking along the road in company with Lewis Stump, a neighbor when he was struck by the automobile of Earl West, Perry township, who was driving past another car. His companion, Mr. Stump was not hurt.

REAL 'TEDDY BEAR' ROCKAWAY, Ore.—A live 'Teddy Bear', the dream of all children, has become the pet of the Roberts family of Rockaway. The little fellow was found hibernating with his mother by a group of loggers. As she came out of the tree, the mother stepped on a logger's foot. The two eyed each other for a few moments, then she slowly lumbered away. Virgil Roberts took her month-old-baby home to his three children.

BRICKER ENDS TEN DAY DRIVE ON WEST COAST

LOS ANGELES, April 19—Gov. John W. Bricker of Ohio, Republican presidential candidate, was to board a plane today for Phoenix, Ariz., on his way back to Columbus at the end of a busy 10-day tour of the Pacific states.

The governor, in his last public appearance on the coast, rapped what he termed the War Relocation Authority laxity and inefficiency. He declared American communities should be permitted after the war to decide for themselves whether or not they will receive disloyal Japanese left in this country.

For the disloyal Japanese, Gov. Bricker advocated deportation, declaring that "no person who confesses he cannot be loyal to the United States should be permitted to find sanctuary here."

The WRA showed inefficiency and laxity in permitting the release of Japanese from relocation centers, the Ohioan declared.

Bricker paid tribute to California's Gov. Earl Warren when he spoke of him as "my close personal friend" and lauded Warren's administration.

The midwest governor spent a busy last day in Los Angeles during which he met additional members of Southern California's Republican presidential delegation, spoke at the Jonathan Breakfast club, acted as host to a score of Ohio societies and other state groups, visited Hollywood's movie studios and caught the first ball tossed at Wrigley field in the opening Pacific Coast League baseball game there between the Los Angeles Angels and Hollywood stars.

Commander Reynolds Played Important Role In Invasion of Italy

Lieutenant Commander Walter A. Reynolds of the United States Coast Guard, a native of Ohio and former resident of Yellowport, who helped lead the way in the Italian invasion, is now spending a leave with Ward H. Peck of Wayne township and James R. Tootle of Green township, Ross county.

The following story of the Salerno invasion, spearheaded by LCIs, manned by Coast Guards, appeared in the "USCG Patrol": "The veteran Coast Guard officer who commanded the lead vessel in that tiny and vulnerable fleet of LCIs which four times was singled out by Nazi dive bombers is Lt. (now Lt. Cmdr.) Walter A. Reynolds. He was the engineering officer of the Coast Guard flotilla.

"To begin at the beginning, Lt. Reynolds said the flotilla of LCIs left a full 18 hours before the main units of the invasion armada, because they were smaller and slower. However, by the time the famed Isle of Capri was reached, at the entrance to the Gulf of Salerno, the heavier and faster units of transports, freighters and warships of all descriptions all were together as a unit, moving in for the kill." The article continues with description of the dive bomber attacks, which were centered on the lead vessel of which Reynolds had command.

He has been 30 years at sea, but has not lost his love for Pickaway and Ross counties where he spent seven years before he enlisted in the navy in 1914. Since that time, all except about a year and a half have been spent with the sea forces.

His seven years of submarine duty before and during the first World War were followed by enlistment in the Coast Guard with the rank of chief machinist mate in 1925. Step by step he advanced to the rank of lieutenant commander which was conferred December 1, 1943.

HEMISPHERE SCHOOL TO OFFER SCHOLARSHIPS TO ABLE STUDENTS IN EACH OF THE REPUBLICS

By HORACE DONALD CRAWFORD
Central Press Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Pan Americanism today is one of the bright stars on the horizon of international relations.

When Panama's President Don Ricardo Adolfo de la Guardia opened the first conference of ministers and directors of education of the American republics last fall, he reminded delegates that in the midst of a warring world representatives of the American republics were discussing education and culture. These, he added, are the very highest of the labors of peace.

The Panamanian president developed this thought-evoking idea. "Peace, which is the foundation stone of progress, rests upon education, because wherever the principles that give life to democratic tolerance prevail, free examination, thoughtful analysis and decorous debate take the place of arguments expressed in force."

Establishment of the Inter-American university in Panama City was a major topic at the conference. The idea of such a university is not new. It goes as far back as 1749 when the University of San Javier was opened at Panama; but not until March 3, 1943, was definite progress made toward converting this idea into reality. On that date, the governing board of the Pan American Union adopted a resolution expressing appreciation for steps taken by the government of Panama toward founding the Inter-American university.

Co-operation of the Pan American Union was indicated. Governments that are members of the Pan American Union were to be urged to co-operate in supporting this proposed center of Pan American learning and research.

Educational leaders at Panama signed a 10-year convention, subject to ratification by governments of the various republics, for organizing the Inter-American university.

Under this convention, Panama is to provide the land for construction of buildings, and make available laboratories, libraries and other University of Panama facilities, as well as the National Museum. Other American governments will contribute toward the upkeep of the university.

The Inter-American university will offer scholarships to students in each republic, in proportion to each nation's contribution toward the university's maintenance.

Provision is made for creation of a fund for special courses of particular interest to American republics, and for co-ordination of special work in existing institutions with research to be undertaken at the Inter-American university.

Delegates adopted a statute of the Inter-American university. Article 1 stated this significant goal: "The Inter-American university is a community of culture at the service of the nations of America."

"Its work shall always rest on the fundamental principles of the spiritual, material and biological welfare of our peoples; it shall uphold the democratic postulates and those of freedom of teaching and investigation; it shall respect religious and political beliefs which do not involve anti-democratic differences of caste or race."

Historic Milestone

This educational conference represented a significant milestone in the development of Pan American co-operation and understanding. It marked the meeting of educational minds of 21 nations conscious of their mutual problems and responsibilities.

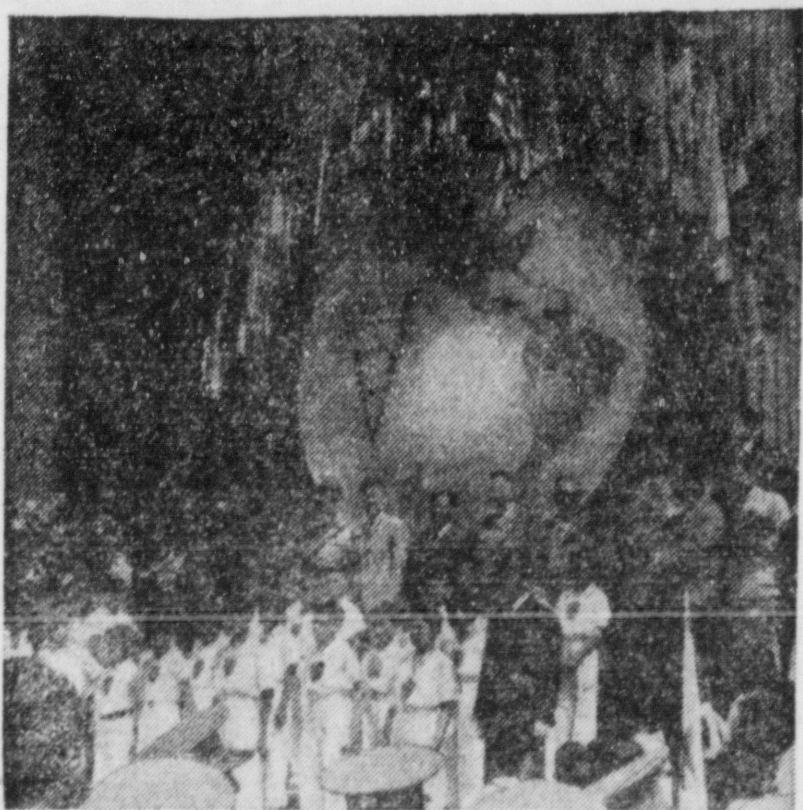

Important committees were formed to undertake such studies as "Philosophy and Technique of Education," "Promotion of Closer Cultural Relations in the Hemisphere," "Co-ordination of American Educational Systems," "Co-operation" and "Projects."

Dr. John W. Studebaker reminded fellow delegates that a century of educational development had been accomplished "with relatively little co-operation among the countries."

In the eagerness of the delegates at Panama, however, Dr. Studebaker discerned a "sense of comradeship which should hearten all of us with high hope that henceforward we shall find increasingly effective means of mutually helpful collaboration."

Six research institutes and schools are provided for in the statute of the Inter-American university. These include the Institute of Sanitary Sciences, Institute of American Anthropology and History, Institute of Comparative Legislation and International Law, Institute of Social and Economic Research, Institute of Folklore Research and Institute of Sciences.

Educational fruits of such institutes require time to ripen. Panama's president touched on basic possibilities of the Inter-American university when he told delegates:

"Only the spiritual, cultural and educational union of peoples will be able to create peace among men and prevent the conflicts that periodically bleed the world and spot the fields of civilization with misery and mourning."

"For the Panamanians, the Inter-American university will be a center of activity in which the spiritual instruments of continental solidarity will be revised and affirmed."

In Washington and elsewhere over the United States one finds crowded classes in Spanish and Portuguese. Books, articles, lectures, motion pictures and art exhibits are all contributing to never before toward enlightening our people on the customs, tastes and ideas of peoples of the other Americas. Text books in the United States are being revised to remove "inaccuracies and statements prejudicial to the cause of inter-American understanding."

This eagerness and enthusiasm so prevalent among peoples of the Americas to get better acquainted with each other, and to understand each other, have probably never been summed up more effectively than at the Panama conference by Dr. Carlos Lozano y Lozano, minister of education of Colombia:

"We can affirm with pride and with serene conscience that never before in the whole of history was there so large a group of people desiring to live in harmony, to respect law, and to construct together the parabola of culture and progress. From this point of view Pan Americanism is the most extraordinary fact of the political life of man."

Pan American Day in 1944, therefore, marks significant new developments in the progress of the idea of Pan Americanism—an idea fostered by Simon Bolivar, Henry Clay, James G. Blaine, Elihu Root, Andrew Carnegie and others who have worked through the decades for the enrichment of cultural life and the growth of understanding and co-operation among peoples of the Americas.

PAN AMERICAN UNION—Center of Pan American interests is this beautiful structure in Washington. Here the governing board of the Union, of which Secretary of State Cordell Hull is a member, meets regularly.

MEDDLING WITH MAC
ALL this recent flurry about General MacArthur is not doing him, or the armed service, or the American public, any good. It merely diverts attention from the main job, which is the winning of a double war on the two sides of a very sick world.
By all accounts this scholarly and rather temperamental military man has been doing a fine job, for which the nation is grateful. It would be unfortunate for everybody if he allowed himself to get snarled up in any more unnecessary correspondence with congressmen or civilians, concerning anything political.

The most important facts about MacArthur are his military genius and his flair for bold strokes and eloquent utterances in connection with his fighting job. Political meddling on his behalf by civilian outsiders might be the ruin of him.
The American people have enough politics and statesmanship, in political hands, to manage that part of the job. What they want now is war victories. MacArthur has provided his share, and will continue to provide them, if meddlers will let him alone.

CHESS-PLAYING CUBAN
A country does well to commemorate its famous sons, no matter what their field. Cuba is now honoring, a little belatedly, the best-known of all Cubans, Jose Raul Capablanca, the chess-player. He died in 1942; now the Cuban Chess Federation has compiled, and the government of the island is distributing, a 300-page book on the master, with complete details of more than 100 of his games.
Capablanca was an infant prodigy who did not quite live up to his promise. At five he beat his father at chess. When still at Columbia he overwhelmed all his intercollegiate opponents. In 1921 he became world's champion at 33, and held the title for six years. Then something happened to him. He lost the championship and never could regain it. Yet he continually lived in hope, and Cuba hoped with him.

JOB FOR WILLKIE
THE Willkie case, or problem, or situation, or whatever it is, still interests the American public and attracts a great deal of comment. People's main interest in him now is what he will do next.
To that question there seems to be an obvious answer. Whatever activity Mr. Willkie may choose to engage in from now on, it should be in some branch of public service while the war lasts, at least. There are many things he can do to further the war effort, officially or unofficially. The present administration, since the war began, has chosen men for important positions with little regard to their politics, and Mr. Willkie anyway is no hide-bound party man. The American public undoubtedly would like to see him in some important war job.

ALLIES' GUNS SHOT DOWN 400
WASHINGTON—Though the nation was shocked at the news of the death of 400 U. S. paratroopers shot down by our own naval gunners over Sicily, unfortunately all of that tragic story was not then told.
Still untold was the fact that, after losing 23 transport planes loaded with 400 men on August 11, we lost a second wave of 21 planes with almost another 400 men three days later—also shot down by Allied naval gunners.
But perhaps even more important is the fact that eight months have now passed, and with thousands of paratroopers poised to begin the invasion of Europe, no step has been taken to provide anything but ordinary transport planes to carry paratroopers over the second front.
The inside story of what happened over Sicily and the failures since is set forth here only with the hope that it may still move the high command to side with the younger officers who have fought a losing battle to give better protection to paratroop-carrying transports. Here is the story:

WHAT LED TO DISASTER
The first paratroop drop over Sicily took place before midnight of August 9-10, before the Navy arrived, and was amazingly successful. Out of about 500 planes participating, only two were lost. General Eisenhower sent his congratulations.
Prior to the opening of the Sicilian campaign, the paratroop operations had been under the command of Colonel Mike Dunn, a fighting Irishman, who had secured an agreement from the Navy that it would not fire on any planes going into Sicily for fear of mistaken identity.
Once the Navy made this agreement, it immediately brought pressure to change it, fearing enemy air raids from Sicily, against Allied shipping.
"No," said Dunn, "your boys are light-fingered. They start shooting at the drop of the hat and, once one starts, the whole bunch will join in. They can't tell who they're firing at in the dark."
The Navy then proposed that a certain air corridor be marked out through which U. S. planes could fly with safety, but Dunn argued that they might get lost, fly off course, and be shot down.
Later, however, Brig. Gen. P. L. Williams, then temporarily at loose ends, was placed in command of the Sicilian air-borne infantry operation, and finally yielded to Navy pressure. The early order was changed.

SLOW TRANSPORTS HELPLESS
So when U. S. paratroop planes came over on the night of August 11, in the Gela operation, 23 were shot down. It is not fair to say, as previously reported, that the Navy shot them all. Some undoubtedly were downed by the enemy. Also, black smoke was pouring over Sicily as a result of fires started by our bombers and it was difficult to tell who was friend and who was foe.
However, U. S. naval gunfire was extremely accurate, and after about two shots to get the range, they made mincemeat of the slow paratroop transports.
Later, on August 14, another 21 planes, bringing paratroopers to aid the British operation at Catania, were shot down by (Continued on Page Eight) unbelievers said. "The martyr is a role that appeals to many voters. Devey had better watch out for him."

● THE BELATED appointment of the dean of Vassar college as a member of the United States delegation to the London conference of Allied Ministers of Education makes almost anybody wonder if women are really interested in holding the public influence in the post-war world they fought so hard to gain before World War II came upon us.
If women do want to hold political and social equality with men why did they not manage to get some woman properly appointed to such an important post without the last minute rushing about? What are the women's organizations thinking of at the moment? How are they planning to justify their existence as guardians of women's rights?
The Federation of Women's Clubs, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the League of Women Voters, the Women's Party—here are millions of organized women. Are they merely listless about the future? Or do they see the handwriting on the wall that promises to send the army of women now doing men's work back into the home where some old-fashioned people think they really do belong?
The right answer to these questions seems confused. Many young women, brand new war mothers, who are struggling to manage young children and war jobs at the same time say quite clearly that they want to give up their war jobs the instant their men come home.
The older women who have raised their families want to keep their new jobs and their pay checks. Such attitudes as these are only a small part of the big post-war program organized women should be considering.
Curiously enough it was not a woman who got the dean of Vassar her last-minute appointment to the United States delegation of educators at London. It was a man close to the White House who rang up the state department and said "Look here, when you made out that list of delegates did you forget that most of the school teachers in this country are women? Better get a woman in the crowd—quick!"

"My family would be furious if they ever knew I was on the stage!"

Small Danger Here From Tropical Ills

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.
DOCTORS WHOSE experience has been confined to the continental United States do not know very much about tropical diseases. The war has exposed our troops in Africa, and the South Pacific to many tropical diseases and the apprehension is aroused that with their return these diseases will be introduced into this country. The danger is probably not very great that they will get much of a foothold because most of them depend for spread on insects that cannot, or at least do not, live anywhere except in tropical climates.
The situation has, however, given an impetus to the study of tropical diseases both among practicing physicians and in the curriculum of our medical schools. All medical schools now have courses in tropical medicine given by experts in that field.
The newer generation of practicing doctors will be well trained both by precept and experience if they serve in the Mediterranean, South Pacific or Indian war theatres in tropical diseases.
Malaria
Malaria, the commonest and most dangerous of all tropical diseases, has always and still is present in some parts of the United States, particularly in the delta region of the Mississippi. We are beginning to see a few sporadic cases in the Northern States in the persons of soldiers and sailors returning from the combat areas. The civilian or home practitioner must be on the alert for these because the patient may present a set of symptoms entirely unfamiliar to him. From London comes a story of a flying officer who returned from a malarious country to spend a few days in his home town. He developed a high fever with symptoms of meningitis and was treated for everything except malaria, from which in a few days he died. His doctor was a sound practitioner, but he just never thought of malaria.
Dysentery, both amebic and bacillary, is present in all the three active war zones. Both forms are quite likely to be brought to the United States, but with proper precautions for the water supply they are unlikely to spread. Filariasis is present in all three theatres of war. It is caused by a little threadlike worm which enters the blood through the bite of certain flies. It causes unsightly deformities called elephantiasis, but very rarely, and returning soldiers with the condition need have little fear of that or any other serious consequences.
I once knew a British colonel with a record of India service who was full of filaria, but the only way it affected him was that the little worms would crawl at night and get in the retinal vessels of his eyes and he had horrible dream illusions of dragons and snakes pursuing him. We have had filariasis in some parts of this country, notably around Charleston, but after it was recognized it was easily eliminated. Its spread is very dependent on optimal conditions of temperature and humidity.
Typhus Fever
Plague has always been a potential danger to all the world when trouble was brewing. It rides with the other three horsemen of the Apocalypse. But even this remote possibility is mitigated by the good results hang obtained against plague with the new sulfa drugs. The returning soldier is not likely to bring back fleas or rats in his knapsack and without them no plague.
Typhus fever is not likely to be brought back here to the United States by returning soldiers because a good delousing will obliterate the danger; the louse and the flea alone spread typhus.
Tropical diseases, such as sleeping sickness, oriental sore, and kala-azar, are so dependent on climate for their spread that there is little danger of their getting a foothold in the continental United States.

NORTH TO DANGER by TOM GILL

SYNOPSIS
Having helped Colin Rae, of the Handrik's Bay Company, to escape mysterious pursuers at Winnipeg, the youthful Irina Meredith went north to meet her elderly fiancé, Rodney Selkirk, at Learmonth. Colin is investigating the seemingly frail, mild-mannered Jonathan Dove, head of two Indian schools and a power among many trappers. "Once I heard him called the most dangerous man in Canada," Colin told Irina. Eluding Dove, left behind in Winnipeg, Colin and Irina flew in a small plane, owned and piloted by Blair Benedict, former school chum of Colin. Heavy snow forced her to make an emergency landing at Trappers Lake where the veteran Alec Gunn sheltered the trio. Next morning, Alec and Blair started on foot for Learmonth, Irina and Colin soon following. The meeting between Irina and Selkirk seems most happy and romantic. Later, Colin tells Selkirk what he knows of the murder of Van Downe, another Company agent, and why he still suspects Dove though the latter has been cleared officially. He shows Rodney a 1917 photo, found behind Van Downe's desk, featuring a group of R.C.A.P. flyers and thinks one of them is Dove. As they are talking, the latter arrives. Colin is astounded. Soon Irina enters the room and later Dove invites her, Selkirk, and Colin to visit his school next Wednesday. Calling Colin outside, Dove promises "a fight to the last ditch" if the former or his Company "fight me." Later, Irina is introduced to "Ma" Corrigale, the innkeeper, and makes a good impression.
CHAPTER ELEVEN
In a gesture of spontaneous welcome, Ma held out both hands. "My dear," she said. There was no mistaking the soft friendliness of her voice, but, as if regretting that suspicion of sentiment she turned on Selkirk. "So this is the girl you kept in a picture on your desk? You should have brought the original up here twenty years ago."
Selkirk colored. "Twenty years ago Irina was reading fairy tales."
"And now she's listening to yours." Ma's tone was heavily ironic, but Colin thought he saw a look of relief on Selkirk's face—relief and perhaps gratitude that Ma was treating his engagement as nothing more than commonplace behavior.
And in that moment Colin seemed to see Selkirk more clearly, without the blurred acceptance of a lifelong friendship. Standing beside that vivid girl, Selkirk's white hair, his finely etched features and close-cropped gray mustache became bleached and colorless. Only his dark eyes—keenly sensitive and observant—saved his face from coldness. And suddenly Colin realized that those dark eyes betrayed a man hungry for love yet afraid to seek it. That explained Selkirk's diffidence—the remoteness that kept most men at a distance but aroused Ma's maternal protectiveness. It explained, too, the half-fearful adoration that suffused Selkirk's face as he smiled at the girl beside him.
But Ma was looking at Colin. "Is Your Lordship staying with me, too?"
"If you've room—"
"I've nothing but room. This time of year we don't need traffic lights in Learmonth. Your old room's waiting for you."
"Then I'll be back tonight," Colin moved toward the door. "I promised to help Blair fix a broken pontoon."

WASHINGTON Report

By HELEN ESSARY
Central Press Columnist
● WASHINGTON—Not for months have I produced a suggestion that has brought the response of my prediction that Wendell Willkie is not only OUT of politics, but that he may even run as vice president on the Democratic ticket.
At Evelyn Walsh McLean's recent breakfast every public figure with whom I exchanged a pleasant "Good morning! Isn't this a wonderful day?" added:
"It certainly is. But, listen, I'm interested in that idea about the future of Willkie. Now what I think is this—"
All of the thoughts were practically identical. They agreed in this main theme—Willkie is NOT out of politics. He has put himself in a more strategic position than he has occupied since running for the White House in 1940.
He can swing his influence in any direction. And will so do.
"I'm convinced that he will come out in support of Roosevelt," a prominent Republican senator said, as we sat in the sunshiny garden at Friendship where most of Mrs. McLean's 200 guests gathered after the breakfast. "And when he does come out for Roosevelt—what am I going to say? Why, I've got the best line ready for the big moment you ever heard anybody speak. It tickles me to death just to think how appropriate it will be, so I'll not tell you now."
A southern senator said, "Of course the Republicans would be mighty glad to get rid of Wendell. He's the Old Man of the Sea to them. If they can shake him off on the Democrats they'll be pleased to death. But, honey, we sure don't want Wendell!"
That Willkie's dramatic withdrawal as a candidate was smartly timed and likely insinuated was the opinion of most of the people with whom I talked. "He's made himself seem slightly martyred," these

Salad in Season

NOW that the salad season is coming up, it's worth remembering that salads are a very versatile item on the menu. There are those that make a hearty dinner or luncheon dish. Those that are just right for dessert. Those that lead off a meal in style and still others that fill their traditional place as a side dish with piquancy and zest. Pictured and described below are four different salads, each designed to fill one of these special purposes. They might be clipped and filed in readiness for the warm days ahead.

These Four Salads, Dessert, Side Dish, Appetizer And Main Dish Respectively, Are Described Under Pictures Below

NO. 1. FRUIT DESSERT SALAD

DISSOLVE 1 PACKAGE fruit flavored gelatine in 2 cups hot water. Chill until slightly thickened. Surround bowl of gelatine with ice, and beat with rotary egg beater until light and fluffy. Add 4 tablespoons real mayonnaise and mix thoroughly, as above. Heap in the center of a large round plate, such as a chop plate, and surround with sections of oranges, slices of apple, halved white grapes and water cross. This recipe makes enough for 6 servings. Same basic idea can, of course, be varied as your own imagination suggests, using different fruits.

NO. 2. MOUSSE APPETIZER SALAD

SOAK 1 TABLESPOON plain gelatine in 1/4 cup cold water, then dissolve over hot water. Add 1 1/2 cups cooked or canned salmon, flaked, 1/4 cup real mayonnaise, 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1/4 teaspoon pepper, and 1 tablespoon chopped onion. Pour into six individual molds or deep muffin pans rinsed in cold water, and chill in refrigerator. When set, unmold each, as illustrated above, on a slice of tomato which has been marinated in French dressing. Garnish with parsley. This is a nice salad to prepare in the morning and leave in the refrigerator till dinner time.

NO. 3. SIDE DISH SALAD

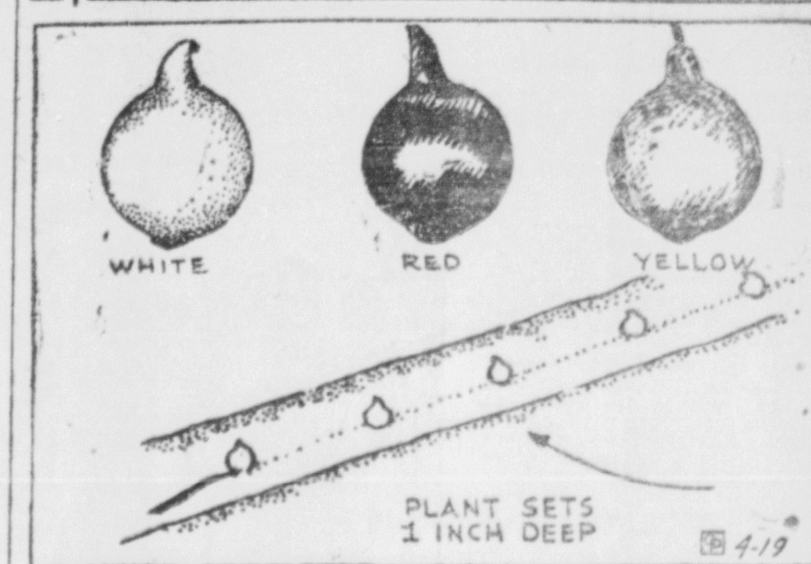

HERE'S A SPRING-FRESH green salad to accompany the luncheon entrée or the main course at dinner. Or, if desired, it's good served by itself as a separate course, with salted or cheese-spread crackers. Cut a carrot in thin lengthwise slices and drop in ice water until curled. Combine carrot slices with 1/2 cup French dressing, 3 tablespoons real mayonnaise and 3 tablespoons chopped cucumber until well blended. Toss lightly with assorted salad greens—lettuce, romaine, chicory, endive, water cross, onion and carrot curls. Recipe will serve six.

NO. 4. MAIN DISH SALAD

TOSS 6 CUPS DICED, cooked potatoes, 1/4 cup chopped onion, 1 1/2 teaspoons salt and 1/2 teaspoon pepper together. Combine 1/4 cup real mayonnaise with 3 tablespoons chili sauce. Add to potatoes and mix well. Press into a ring mold, or shape into a ring. Chill in refrigerator until serving time, then unmold and fill center with grilled, sliced frankfurters. Place on a large round serving plate, and surround with quartered tomatoes and salad greens. Large, bright green spinach leaves make an attractive garnish, as you can see in the picture.

Today's VICTORY GARDEN-GRAPH

Onion Sets Save Labor in Victory Garden

By DEAN HALLIDAY
Released by Central Press Association

ONION SETS are the short cut to having onions in the small Victory garden. They are also labor savers if you want extra early onions.

Onion sets are the small dry bulbs of onions which were grown last year. They can be purchased by the pint or quart at most seed stores. One quart of onion sets will plant a 100-foot row.

White, red and yellow varieties of onions can be obtained in onion sets. The white varieties, however, are the most popular. Plant onion sets one inch deep and three inches apart in the row as illustrated in the accompanying Garden-Graph. The bulbs will start growth almost immediately and will be of edible size within a few weeks. In many gardens onions grown from sets are the first return from the garden.

It is not wise to plant too many onion sets at one time, since successive plantings can continue as late into the summer as the sets remain in good condition.

TO AIR PENICILLIN

Cavalcade of America will broadcast a stirring story of the discovery of this war's miraculous life-saving agent, penicillin, next Monday. Cavalcade's play, entitled "The Story of Penicillin," will headline two movie stars, Thomas Mitchell as narrator and George Coulouris as Dr. Howard Florey, English scientist, who helped tremendously in the development of penicillin. Cavalcade's play brings listeners the story of victory in the war of scientists against the forces of disease and death in the discovery of penicillin. It was learned after Dunkirk that even sulfa failed in some cases to save the lives of wounded where blood poisoning set in. Penicillin did the trick... saved thousands of lives where the wounds might have been fatal had it not been for the wonder medicine.

FOR SHAPELY LEGS

Exercises designed to fill out thin legs and take weight off plump ones will be described by Julia Sanderson, in her broadcast Thursday. She will also outline three essentials of good grooming, and will help women choose hats to suit their faces. Her songs are "Walking on Air" and "The Flower Song," and with the Serenaders, "Get the Moon Out of Your Eyes." The Serenaders harmonize "Plant a Little Victory Garden in Your Own Back Yard" and "A Lovely Way to Spend an Evening." Johnny Gart and Jack Shikret, the organ-piano team, play "Mardi Gras," from Ferde Grofe's "Mississippi Suite."

FOUR STAR GUESTS

Claudette Colbert, Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten and Shirley Temple, will provide a brain buster for Dunninger, the master mentalist, when he broadcasts April 26. Each of the stars will send a signed statement, in a sealed envelope, cross-country to Ruth Bryan Rohde, daughter of the late William Jennings Bryan. Miss Rohde, who will join Vaughn Monroe, orchestra leader, and Fred Archibald, publisher of the Albany Times-Union, on the judges' bench for the program, will keep the statements sealed in their envelopes, until after Dunninger has attempted to read them by thought transference.

MENJOU GUEST

Barry Wood is consulting tailors and Patsy Kelly is rushing around to coutourieres these days in a mad effort to spruce up as befits a host and hostess greeting a splendiferous guest on their "Million Dollar Party", Saturday. And

At the other table where this method was tried, West refused to over-ruff the spade 2 on the third club trick, realizing South wanted him to, and discarded a heart instead. That made it impossible for South to reach dummy after the opposing trumps were out, so he lost three diamond tricks and was set two.

Note to the lady who sat next to that popular actor at last week's "Abie's Irish Rose": the reason all the actors in the show nodded to the woman continuously during the broadcast was that he used to be "teacher." Ex-producer Rip Van Ronkle spent part of his six-hour pass that day in New York viewing "Abie."

$450,000 Offered for Water Plant

OHIO FIRM TO WEIGH PROPOSAL AT EARLY DATE

Bonding House To Advance Cash For Deal On 30 Year Basis

CITY NOT OBLIGATED

Engineers Provide Data On Which Valuation Of Property Is Set

Circleville has offered $450,000 for the local plant of the Ohio Water Service Co. and a "yes" or "no" answer is expected shortly after a meeting of company directors scheduled for May 8.

If the offer is accepted the bonding house by Stifel, Nicolaus & Co. will advance money to Circleville to buy the property, accepting mortgage revenue bonds for the total and providing for retirement within 30 years. The mortgage bonds will apply to no city property other than the water works and will have no effect on tax rates. City representatives pointed out that the city has everything to gain by the deal and nothing to lose.

The bonds would be paid off by revenue from the water works. Engineers declared that the city could not only pay off the bonds in 30 years, but could accumulate a surplus of more than $125,000.

Long Discussion

City purchase of the water works has been under discussion for many years without result. This present move, however, is expected to obtain results as city officials stressed the fact that the offer is fair and one that can not be ignored by the Ohio company.

The city of Circleville now pays approximately $7,000 a year for water. This payment would continue under city ownership and the sum is figured in annual net revenue intended for use in bond retirement.

Engineers Survey

Engineers employed by the city made a survey of the local water property and reported it in excellent condition. The valuation on which the offer was made was set by them. Attention was called to the fact that more than 60 percent of the valuation is underground. As regards the water mains, the engineers said they should be good for at least another 100 years as the minimum life of cast iron mains is set at 100 years and is established at a low figure for the purpose of writing off depreciation. In making the survey engineers inspected sections of the mains in various parts of the city and found that the original plant still is on them.

City officials in announcing the offer stressed the fact that the municipality will be under no obligation whatever in connection with the purchase. The bonding house will advance the money on the water works plant alone and if the city should make a failure of the project it would lose only the water works on which the money was loaned.

Engineers have assured city officials that the plant will operate at a profit sufficient to retire the bonds in the stipulated time.

Decision to make the offer was reached following all-day conferences Tuesday between representatives of the Ohio company, engineers employed by the city, representatives of the bonding house and city officials.

At council meeting Wednesday night a resolution will be passed providing a formal offer for the water plant.

naval gunners—probably a combination of U. S. and British ships.

Immediately, a committee of inquiry was appointed in North Africa and an investigation was conducted to ascertain the causes. The findings so far have been shrouded with a strict veil of secrecy. However, it can be revealed that there has been vigorous debate inside the Air Forces regarding means of better protection for paratroopers.

WALLACE TO CHINA

One significant sidelight on Vice President Wallace's forthcoming trip to China is that the President personally planned to announce it. His announcement was planned as an indirect Presidential blessing to the Vice President, and the politicians were expected to draw their own conclusions.

The fact that the White House did not make the announcement was a pure fluke, due in part to a newspaper leak.

The leak got to a British newspaper, the London Daily Mail, which tried to file a story to London. However, the story was stopped by U. S. censors, because it is never permissible to publish the movement of a U. S. Cabinet officer, the Vice President or the President.

After the London Daily Mail failed, R. T. Bowman of the Southam newspapers in Canada attempted to file the story to Canada. Once again, the censor intervened.

Only then did the story leak to U. S. newspapermen in the State Department press room who immediately called the Vice President's office. There, his secretary got worried by the many phone calls and urged Wallace to make an announcement. Wallace finally yielded, much to the disappointment of his political friends, who had helped plan for the White House announcement.

Actually, Wallace is not going to Chungking to try to bring a reconciliation between Chinese factions.

"I don't speak Chinese and I won't be able to do anything like that," remarked the Vice President to friends. Then, in reply to a question as to what he was going for, he looked down at his hands, callused from work in his Victory garden, and said: "I'm going to try to introduce a new agricultural implement to China—a push-hoe."

NOTE — Generalissimo and Madame Chiang Kai-shek have been irked at the Allies ever since the Cairo conference, when Churchill refused Roosevelt's suggestion to return Hongkong to China. Recently the Chinese have become even more irked by failures and defeats in Burma. Wallace, No. 2 man in the Roosevelt Administration, will endeavor to heal this by a courtesy call re-emphasizing American interest in China's welfare.
